CIS 28 Using Database Applications

This course offers the student advanced instruction in relational databases in a Windows environment. The student designs and develops a database from user specifications. Topics include analyzing source documents, normalizing a database, techniques of effective design and creating and implementing all tables and database objects. Applications used are typical business operations such as inventory and human resources.